THE LAST LEAF. I ve bathed in April showers :

but now my days are o'er.
I'll never whisper more
My story in the breeze,
To all the listening trees. And now I gladly go, Since friends are lying low. For ah! the time is brief For mortal and for leaf.

I end my trembling quest,
I've gained the promised rest,

One instance of this is yet a terrible one instance of this is yet a terrible memory in Monlerey.

An extreamely wealthy and influential Mexican, Don Vincente Ibarra, was at home upon his hacienda one day about about a Dupin marched by. Perhaps the man was a Liberal; certainly he sympathized with Juarcz, and had done much her the cause in the shape of recuire and but the cause in the shape of recuting and resistance to the predatory bands of Imperialists. As yet, however, he had taken up no arms, and had paid his proportion of the taxes levied upon him.

Dupin was at dinner when his scouts heretalt have into carms. In fearth of the

The meal was a delightful one. Dupin laked as a subject who had a prince for his guest, and as a lover who had a woman for a listener. In the intervals of the conversation he served wine. Ibarra was delighted. His suspicious Spanish heart relaxed the tension of its grim datense, and he even stroked the tiger's velvet skin, who closed his sleepy eyes and purred under the careia.

Buara's deep olive face grew ghastly white, and he fell upon his knees. No prayers, no agonizing entreaty, no desponding application wrung from a strong man in his agony, availed him aught. At the appointed time his rigid frame awang between heaven and earth, another vichad borne iruit.

And so this maner of a man—this white-haired Dupin—decorated, known to two continents as the "Tiger of the Tropics," who kept four picked Chasscurs to stand guard over him night and day, this old-young soldier, with a voice like a schoolagir and a heat like a glacier, came to Monterey and recruted a regiment of Contre Guerillas, a regiment that feared neither God, man, the Mexicans nor the devil.

All calamities seem to run in cycles.

They group themselves in systematic order, and recur at stated intervals of time Another is a year of carthquakes. Another is a year of carthquakes. Another is a year of great crime. Last year was a year of disastrous contagrations. All evils, miseries, curses, and calamities, physical, social, or moral assert to combine the complete of the combine of the in our large cities horses are exposed without let or hindrance on the part of without let or hindrance on the part of sanitary authorities, to just those conditions from which the great pestilences among human beings have sprung. We take precautions in the public interest against over-crowding, filth, and absence of ventilation in tenement houses, but we take no precautions against the over-crowding, filth, and want of light and ventilation of city stables; and yet every one of the large stables may fairly and properly be called a hot-bed of horse disease. seem to combine themselves together in the revolutions of time as perfectly and symetrically as bits of glass in kaleido-scope. The most curious feature of this grouping is, that it is confined to the bad things. The good things of earth seem to be dismetrically opposed to each oth-er, and to have no affinity for combina-tion. They not only fall a er, and to have no amnity for combina-tion. They not only fall to come at reg-ular intervals, but, when they do come, they come alone, as if they had stumbled upon the possessor by blind chance. There is no element of chance, however, in the visitation of the miseries. There is a masterly method in their combination, and a mathematical eventness is the cal-

Light is as necessary to a horse's health as to that of a man, and yet nearly all our horses live, except during their few hours of work out of doors, often in the case of the city horse not over two or three, almost in complete darkness. In the best and most commodious city stables they have not been the city stables they have not been the commodious. and a mathematical exactness is the cal-culation of their directi orbits. Having run through a complete programme of fires, floods, tornadoes, and earthquakes, and an equally complete series of criminal convulsion during the past four or five years, the world now seems to be conand most commodious city stables they have nothing more than a twilight. Morever, the lungs of the horse are just like those of a man—only larger; their functions are precisely the same; the contact of oxygen with his blood is just as necessary for the preservation of his health and strength; nevertheless, nearly all cut stables are hills and strength; nevertheless, nearly years, the world now seems to be coming down with aliments of various descriptions, and both its two-legged and four-legged population are sending for the doctor with cheerful unanimity, if not with pious resignation. Persa and India are sick abed with the choiers, and are rapidly spreading thir horrible somplaint all over Europe. The latest cable dispatches report it as firmly seated in Russis, Prussia and Hungary. In Gumbinnen, a town of Eastern Prussia, near Konigsberg, it has broken out with violence, and several fatal cases are reprorted. all our stables are built and regulated ap narently on the theory that the horse does all our stables are built and regulated ap-parently on the theory that the horse does not need fresh air at all. The windows are small, and are either not made to open, or are never opened. There are, in the case of horses kept for pleasure, and of horses kept in the country, mitigations of their lot which we need not point out; but in the city the working horse is treat-ed worse than a steam engine or sewing machine. He is almost invariably, it his owner be poor, shut up during sixteen hours out of the twenty-lour in a small, noisome den, every plank and beam in noisome den, every plank and beam in which is impregnated with foul exhalations, and which probably stands in a fettid alley, or behind a filthy yard. The heavy mists and cold night dews which characterize the present season are very trying to delicate organizations, and in low-lying and swampy localities they produce an enormous crop of intermitten fevers of various types and degrees of intensity. At this very time there are prob ably half a million of people in the United States suffering from periodical fevers by miasmatic fogs and exhalations. What missmatic fogs and exhalations. What makes the prevalance of this evil the more deplorable is the fact that it might in all cases be easily prevented. Maiara and damp produce little or no effect upon the system pre-fortified by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Every fall and spring hundred of letters are received from persons residing in lever and ague districts who state that while their neighbors are incapacitated for labor by that debilitating disease, they have been happly exempted from attack by the regular use of empted from attack by the regular use the great vegetable antidote to missm As a chlologopic or specific for intermit-tent and remittent fevers the Bitters may be justly accounted infallible. They er-adicate the complaints in their most ob-stinate forms; but the wiser course is to strate forms; but the wiser course is to forcestall attack by taking the preparation as a preventive. The amount of productive labor withdrawn from active service during several months in the year by malrious maladies is immense, and the pecuniary losses to individuals, families, and the nation from this cause is incalculable. Bear in mind that hy noing and required. Bear in mind that by toning and regula-ting the system with Hostetter's Bitter ting the system with Hostetter's Bitters before the calamity comes, it may always be escaped; and let it also be remembered that indigestion, general debility, billousness, constipation, nervous complaints, and indeed almost all disturbances and derangements of the physical system are controlable by this genial restorative.

Our readers are aware that we are not muc given to the praise of quack doctors. But when a physician such as Dr. Longdon comes amongst us as a permanent resident, bringing with his the highest credentia's of a thorough education together with the most eminent-skill in his pro-fession, we deem it our duty to the public, espe-cially the afflicted, to commend him to favor. If in any profession men should be thoroughly educated, the medical is the one. There should be no ignorance in a calling that so much concerns the happiness and lives of human beings. Thou-sands die for the want of scientific physicians, and thousands more through the malpractice of quacks are doomed to lives of wretchedness an pain.
